The History of Minnesota

AND

Tales of the Frontier.

BY

JUDGE CHARLES E. FLANDRAU

PUBLISHED BY E. W. PORTER,
ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA.
1900.
 seal employed as the state seal of Minnesota at the time of its admission into the Union. * * * The said design of the state seal shall be surrounded by appropriate representations of the moccasin flower, indigenous to Minnesota, surrounding said central design, and appropriately arranged on the said white ground shall be nineteen stars, emblematic of the fact that Minnesota was the nineteenth state to be admitted into the Union after its formation by the thirteen original states. There shall also appear at the bottom of the flag, in the white ground, so as to be plainly visible, the word ‘Minnesota.’ ”

The commission prepared a very beautiful design for the flag, following closely the instructions given by the legislature, which was adopted, and is now the authorized flag of the state. The flag-staff is surmounted by a golden gopher rampant, in harmony with the popular name given to our state. May it ever represent the principles of liberty and justice, and never be lowered to an enemy! The original flag, artistically embroidered in silk, can be seen at the office of the governor at the state capitol.

THE OFFICIAL FLOWER OF THE STATE, AND THE METHOD OF ITS SELECTION.

On the twentieth day of April, 1891, the legislature of the state passed an act entitled “An act to provide for the collection, arrangement and display of the products of the State of Minnesota at the World’s Columbian Exposition of one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, and to make an appropriation therefor.” This act created a commission of six citizens of the state, to be appointed by the governor, and called “The Board of World’s Fair Managers of Minnesota.” The women of the state determined that there should be an opportunity for them to participate in the exposition on the part of Minnesota, and a convention of delegates from each county of the state was called, and held at the People's Church, in St. Paul, on Feb. 14, 1892. This convention elected one woman delegate and one alternate, from each of the seven congressional districts of the state. There were also two national lady managers from Minnesota, nominated by the two national representatives from Minnesota and appointed by the president of the United States, who were added to the seven delegates so chosen, and the whole was called "The Woman's Auxiliary to the State Commission." The women so chosen took charge of all the matters properly pertaining to the women's department of the fair.

At one of the meetings of the ladies, held in St. Paul, the question of the selection of an official flower for the state was presented, and the sentiment generally prevailed that it should at once be decided by the assembly; but Mrs. L. P. Hunt, the delegate from Mankato, in the second congressional district, wisely suggested that the selection should be made by all the ladies of the state, and they should be given an opportunity to vote upon the proposition. This suggestion was approved, and the following plan was adopted: Mrs. Hunt was authorized to appoint a committee, of which she was to be chairman, to select a list of flowers to be voted on. Accordingly she appointed a subcommittee, who were to consult the state botanist, Mr. Conway MacMillan, who was to name a number of Minnesota flowers from which the ladies were to choose. He presented the following:

Lady Slipper (Moccasin Flower—_Cypripedium Spectabile_).
Sily Aster, Cone Flower (Brown-eyed Susan).

Wild Rose.

History of Minnesota.

229
the Rocky Mountains, all of these being found in Minnesota, and about a dozen species occur on this continent. They are perennial herbs, with irregular flowers, which grow singly or in small clusters, the colors of some of which are strikingly beautiful. The species adopted by the women of the State of Minnesota is the Cypripedium Spectabile, or the showy lady slipper.

The ladies naturally desired that their choice should be ratified by the state legislature, and one of their number prepared a report of their doings, in a petition to that body, asking its approval. Whoever drew the petition named the flower chosen by the ladies as "Cypripedium Calceolus," a species which does not grow in Minnesota, but is purely of European production. The petition was presented to the senate on the fourth day of February, 1893. The journal of the senate shows the following record, which is found on page 167:

"Mr. Dean asked the unanimous consent to present a petition from the Women’s Auxiliary to the World’s Fair, relative to the adoption of a state flower and emblem, which was read.

"Mr. Dean offered the following concurrent resolution, and moved its adoption:

"Be it resolved by the senate, the house of representatives concurring, that the wild Lady Slipper, or Moccasin Flower (‘Cypripedium Calceolus’), be, and the same is hereby, designated and adopted as the state flower or emblem of the State of Minnesota,’ which was adopted."

In the Legislative Manual of 1893 appears, on page 606, the following:

"On April from the Won presented to t' state flower. by the house (Flower (Cypri) or floral emble.

The word per; but, as I botany is not i foreigner. As simlated so m no trouble in the house did r mistake will in prosperity of I committees an dealing with th.

We now h choose from, a.

If the hous senate resoluti its journal or find.

Among the men’s Auxilia H. F. Brown, statue for-the of Minnesota’s architect of th ture, and there which would t in Minnesota flowers, colors of species is the.

should its num- to the pe-
"Cypri-grow in. The day of
was the present World's em-resolu-

repre-
and the state was.

page

HISTORY OF MINNESOTA.

"THE STATE FLOWER.

"On April 4, 1893 [should be February], a petition from the Women’s Auxiliary to the World’s Fair was presented to the senate, relative to the adoption of a state flower. By resolution of the senate, concurred in by the house (?), the Wild Lady Slipper, or Moccasin Flower (Cypripedium) was designated as the state flower or floral emblem of the State of Minnesota."

The word “Calceolus” means a little shoe or slipper; but, as I said before, the species so designated in botany is not indigenous to Minnesota, and is purely a foreigner. As we have in the course of our growth assimilated so many foreigners successfully, we will have no trouble in swallowing this small shoe, especially as the house did not concur in the resolution, and while the mistake will in no way militate against the progress or prosperity of Minnesota, it should be a warning to all committees and Western legislators to go slow when dealing with the dead languages.

We now have the whole body of cypripediums to choose from, and may reject the calceolus.

If the house of representatives ever concurred in the senate resolution, it left no trace of its action, either in its journal or published laws, that I have been able to find.

Among the many valuable achievements of the Women’s Auxiliary one deserves special mention. Mrs. H. F. Brown, one of the delegates at large, suggested a statue for the Woman’s Building, to be the production of Minnesota’s artistic conception and execution. The architect of the state building had disallowed this feature, and there was no public fund to meet the expense, which would be considerable. The ladies, however, decided to procure the statue, and rely on private subscription to defray the cost. Mrs. L. P. Hunt thought that sufficient funds might be raised from the school children of the state, through a penny subscription. Enough was raised, however, to secure a plaster cast of great beauty, representing Hiawatha carrying Minnehaha across a stream in his arms, illustrating the lines in Longfellow’s poem:

“Over wide and rushing rivers
In his arms he bore the maiden.”

This statue adorned the porch of the Minnesota building during the fair. It was designed and made by a very talented young Norwegian sculptor, then residing in Minneapolis—the late Jakob Fjelde. It is proposed to cast the statue in bronze and place it in Minnehaha park, Minneapolis, at some future day.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME “GOPHER STATE.”

Most of the states in the Union have a popular name. New York is called the “Empire State,” Pennsylvania the “Keystone State,” etc. As you come west they seem to have taken the names of animals. Michigan is called the “Wolverine State,” Wisconsin the “Badger State,” and it is not at all singular that Minnesota should have been christened the “Gopher State.” These names never originate by any recognized authority. They arise from some event that suggests them, or from some important utterance that makes an impression on the public mind. In the very early days of the territory—say, as early as 1854 or 1855,—the question was discussed among the settlers as to what name should be adopted by Minnesota, and for a time it was called by some the “Beaver State.” That name seemed to have the greatest number of advo objection that the some of our strear him to characterize While this debate beaver spoke of ti but it never reach was well known that was introduced as being a rather insi destructive, and in many, as too usele blem of the comin early day, full con to be a great and settled on this suit have before stated amend the consti bonds in the sum tion of the railro sidized with land volved this amenc opponents of the the subject into x culated througho enthusiasm in fa represented ten n with the weight o marked “$10,000 the members of t pass the act, and their backs was a of cars drawn by lead proclaiming.